Comments	The green belt around Oxford, in particular near Kidlington, has already lost a significant proportion of its surrounding undeveloped land. As the countryside is squeezed, and thereby the space left for nature reduced, biodiversity is being decimated: 43% of UK bird species are now in decline and 60% of the country's flying insects have been lost over just the last twenty years. We have to reverse this annihiliation, stop developing ever more land unnecessarily, and to do everything we can to promote nature!
