Supporting a new stadium to home Oxford United FC is critical to its survival. The Football Club is also a community resource of invaluable importance - it is not simply one of the few cultural institutions in Oxford that actually serves the people of the county (rather than purely international audiences, like the University), but it is also the largest to do this. The alternative is to leave its survival to chance, which, in the current climate, would almost inevitably mean disenfranchisement from those people it was set up by and for in Headington in 1893.
