

If there is no direct bus or train within walking distance then some people will have the cost of several journeys, even if there is a special ticket at a discounted price. It will be considerably cheaper for several people to travel in the same car and park in a residential street

I have no objection to a new stadium located close to Kidlington but this is not the right location. A far better site would be in the station / park and ride complex itself. There is land behind the park and ride which could be used for the stadium and other planned facilities. Additional car parking spaces could be provided which, together with the fact the stadium would be further from residential streets in Kidlington, would mean people would be less motivated to park in Kidlington.

An even better alternative would be to purchase the existing stadium and refurbished it to provide far better facilities. This solution would be:

Considerably less expensive
Much less disruptive
