Comments	<input type="text" value="I am surprised no foul drainage required as obviously when extracting oil surely someone would need to be on site and may need toilet facilities. Are there any by products from extraction if so how are these disposed Where is existing water course for disposal of surface water there is no stream or brook nearby Size of building seems very large for small amount of land this land has been apparently maintained for a few years with no storage land has not been added so why so much storage size of barn would hold machinery for far greater acreage and small sill as stated. If such a large building required for machinery will it be serviced on site will means of disposal of any oil from maintaining machinery be on site will there be diesel for machinery stored on site"/>
