Comments	<input type="text" value="We have bought a house with the promise that the fields would remain fields, the traffic is already very busy at peak times, and the wildlife which is already quite scarce is going to suffer even more. The eco house we invested in, will be surrounded by so many new houses, which means we will have poorer air quality, more traffic and less wildlife. I suffer from asthma and allergies, so air quality is very important. We spend money on a monthly basis on ground services in our neighbourhood which will go up, as more population, means more kids and graffiti, more litter, less eco-consciousness and a dip in quality of life. This is why I object to the building of new homes in the stipulated areas. Instead of building more houses, why not look at other ways to tackle affordable housing shortages, educate the young on how to save and look at the capacity of existing resources and find ways to control ever expanding populations to the detriment of existing human beings, struggling wildlife and stop adding to the world's problems."/>
