Comments	This application is actively going against the town's pledges for both healthy living and reducing emissions. The town has been brave in its pledges in both of these, but this seems like a backwards step. It takes away precious green space from the outskirts of our town that is used as one of the few access points to public paths and walks in the countryside. The establishment itself is not considered healthy eating, and the drive-through set up encourages the use of a car to get there. The location will also encourage people to drive there as it is in a place without large pedestrian footfall. There are insufficient services to make cycling or walking a reasonable option to visit this establishment. When so many of us are trying to cycle more and use cars less, in response to the climate crisis and a desire to be healthier (much encouraged by our councils) this seems like a development that does not fit in with our town's ambitious plans for better living.
