Comments	I don't need to list the obvious reasons, for anyone hoping to enjoy living in this area of the U.K., to strongly object to this rampant rape of our country. There will be others equally or more passionate, who will do so far more eloquently than I. Following previous objections many local people have made, we were listened to and planning was refused. Then on appeal, the development was passed by the inspector despite a huge majority of people in the area supporting the original refusal. This was hardly democratic and left the local population suspicious of the process. Nevertheless, objecting appears to be the only weapon in our collective armoury. Who gains? Landlords, developers - people who only care about personal advancement and wealth. People who probably live far away from where this monstrous construction will affect them. Why are we spreading outwards to build essential homes, why not upwards? Why is such huge development happening with so little thought into developing the necessary infrastructure. Are these extra homes really needed here when there are already so many being built? Why aren't brown field plots being utilised? I wonder how many of these objections will be read. Bicester has already and continues to expand disproportionately. ENOUGH! ENOUGH! ENOUGH! The NIMBY members of society have complained over the years and not been listened to. At some point, their concerns will be realised - let's hope it will not be too late. Once our countryside becomes concreted over, the related damage cannot be reversed. I beg you to see reason and reject this application.
