Comments

There is enough brownfield space on which to build this kind of development. This will not only use good farmland, it will completely change the character of the area. It will increase traffic levels to unacceptable levels on small rural roads, making it difficult for locals to get around (especially when the pot holes start to appear). It will also consume a vast amount of habitat for wildlife that is already under serious threat.

Will the buildings at least have solar panels on every roof, underground water storage and ground source heat pumps?
