They are ridge and furrow, but also display some unique characteristics which I am still taking advice upon. For my researches, this application could not have come at a worse time, and I think the applicant is totally incorrect in implying these fields have no value. Subject to further work, I am inclined to think they are totally unique, and should certainly not be lost.&lt;br/&gt;&lt;br/&gt;They also have some (recent) historical significance, as they form the immediate vista for the handing over of the secrets of the atomic bomb between Klaus Fuchs and Ursula Buerton (aka " what="" will=""/> This is also one of the very last pieces of open land in Oxfordshire due east of Banbury, which also renders it very valuable.  For these reasons, I very much oppose this application"/>
