Comments	<input type="text" value="Oxford has one of the worst housing crises in the country, caused largely by a failure to build enough new houses. Rents are needlessly high, contributing substantially to the cost-of-living crisis. For this reason alone, there should have to be unusually strong reasons to reject the proposal. Furthermore, the location is ideal; putting more houses next to a train station with a frequent service into the city centre (set to become even more frequent with EWR) is a no-brainer."/>
